PREFACE.

THE author of this little work having been for some time engaged in teaching, has felt the need of something to excite a deeper interest in the exercise of Spelling. Though an exercise of great importance, it is still much neglected, or but indifferently attended to. One reason, and perhaps the principal one, why it is conducted with so little interest and success, is, probably, the sameness in the maner of conducting it.

The author has practised with much success the following method of spelling: Let each scholar take a slate: give out a word requesting all to write it at the same time: then call upon some one for his manner of writing it, and command those differing to manifest it by raising the hand. Or, give out a number of words, say twenty or more, allowing sufficient time between the words to have each one distinctly written, and at the close examine each slate, marking those wrong, for the scholar to correct. This may be done with a class of twenty in about thirty minutes, and may be considerably varied by the teacher. The above methods will be found greatly to interest the scholar, and the advantages are at least two-fold;—they enable each scholar to spell every word in the lesson, and at the same time exercise him in writing.

Another reason why this manner of conducting the exercise is preferable to the common method, is that it teaches the young scholar practically. It is not unfrequently the case that a person may be quite a proficient in the usual, oral manner of spelling, and yet that same person, if called upon to write, will make many mistakes.

In making this selection, the author has endeavored as much as possible, to insert those words which are most difficult, and at the same time, to avoid those not in common use. He has arranged the words according to the number of syllables, without any regard to similarity of pronunciation &c. It was not considered necessary that the syllables should be accented in a work of this kind, and consequently no accents have been placed.
